Massachusetts Man Accused of Plotting College Bombing Due in Court

(Reuters) – The son of a Boston police captain arrested this month and accused of planning to bomb a college cafeteria on behalf of the Islamic State militant group is due in court on Wednesday to face criminal charges. Alexander Ciccolo, 23, was arrested on July 4 after illegally receiving four guns from a person working with the U.S. Justice Department, which had placed him under surveillance after his father alerted authorities to his activities. Ciccolo told an informant that he wanted to build bombs similar to those detonated at the Boston Marathon in 2013, and federal agents saw him buy a pressure cooker similar to the ones used in that attack, which killed three people and injured more than 260, according to federal prosecutors. Authorities also said they found partially built bombs at his apartment that were filled with a mix of shredded Styrofoam and motor oil, a combination that federal prosecutors said Ciccolo believed would stick to victims' skin, causing severe injuries. Ciccolo will face two criminal counts when he appears in U.S. District Court in Springfield, Massachusetts: One for illegally receiving four guns including two military-style assault rifles and one for stabbing a nurse with a pen while he was being booked at a jail in Western Massachusetts after his arrest. Ciccolo could be sentenced to up to 20 years in prison if convicted.

Afghanistan Examining Claim Taliban Leader Mullah Omar Died

(AP) – An Afghan official said Wednesday his government is examining claims that reclusive Taliban leader Mullah Mohammed Omar is dead. The Taliban could not be immediately reached on the government's comments about Omar, who has been declared dead many times before. Omar, the one-eyed, secretive head of the Taliban and an al-Qaida ally, led a bloody insurgency against U.S.-led forces after they toppled him from his rule in Afghanistan in 2001. Zafar Hashemi, a deputy spokesman for Afghan President Ashraf Ghani, made the announcement at a hastily called news conference Wednesday in the Afghan capital, Kabul. "We are aware of the reports of the passing away of Mullah Omar, the Taliban leader," Hashemi said. "We are still in the process of checking those reports, and as soon as we get confirmation or verification, we will inform the Afghan people and the media." If Omar died, it could complicate the peace process as it removes a figurehead for the insurgents, who until now have appeared to act collectively but are believed to be split on whether to continue the war or negotiate with Ghani's government. Ending the war has been a main priority for Ghani since he took office last year. "Whether he is dead or alive is important because he is the collective figure for the Taliban," said a Western diplomat with connections to the Taliban leadership. "If he is dead, it would be much more difficult to get negotiations with the Taliban because there would be no collective figure to rally around and take collective responsibility for entering peace talks."

Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

SITUATION SUMMARY

Weather of Concern

- Fire weather is a concern for portions of far northern California through today, 07/29/15.

Northern California and Central Coast

- Very warm to hot inland temperatures expected through Thursday of this week. High pressure building over the region will result in a continued warming trend through midweek. Widespread high temperatures in the 90s are forecast for inland areas with the warmest interior valleys expected to reach or exceed 100 degrees.

Central California and Southern San Joaquin Valley:

- A northwestward influx of monsoonal moisture is expected over the central California interior later this week with an increase in clouds, humidity and a chance of thunderstorms to mainly the mountains and desert. A few thunderstorms could drift into the San Joaquin Valley and adjacent foothills from Thursday evening through Friday evening. Hikers and other outdoor enthusiasts should keep a watchful eye on the sky and be prepared to take shelter if and when the weather turns threatening. In addition to dangerous lightning, thunderstorms can bring gusty winds, heavy rain and small hail.

Southern California:

- High pressure aloft along with weak onshore flow will bring an extended period of hot weather to Southwest California. Temperatures will rise into the upper 90s to lower 100s Wednesday through Friday, subsiding by just a degree or two Saturday and Sunday. At the same time, southeast flow will bring a deep layer of monsoonal moisture into the area. The combination of high temperatures and increasing humidity may cause some areas to approach excessive heat levels, especially Thursday and Friday. During this time, people at risk of heat-related illness should be extremely cautious, and seek shelter in air conditioning if possible. In addition, there will be a chance of thunderstorms over the area Wednesday afternoon through Sunday, and possibly into early next week. The thunderstorms will be most likely to develop over the mountains, interior valleys and deserts east of the mountains. However, some coast and coastal valley locations could see thunderstorms Thursday and Thursday night. The storms that develop Wednesday are likely to be mainly dry with a risk of dry lightning. Any storms that develop by Thursday will be capable of producing heavy downpours, dangerous cloud to ground lightning, strong gusty winds, and flash flooding. The flash flood risk will be highest over recent burn scars, but any steep, loose soils and/or dry washes will have a risk of producing flash floods and debris flows.

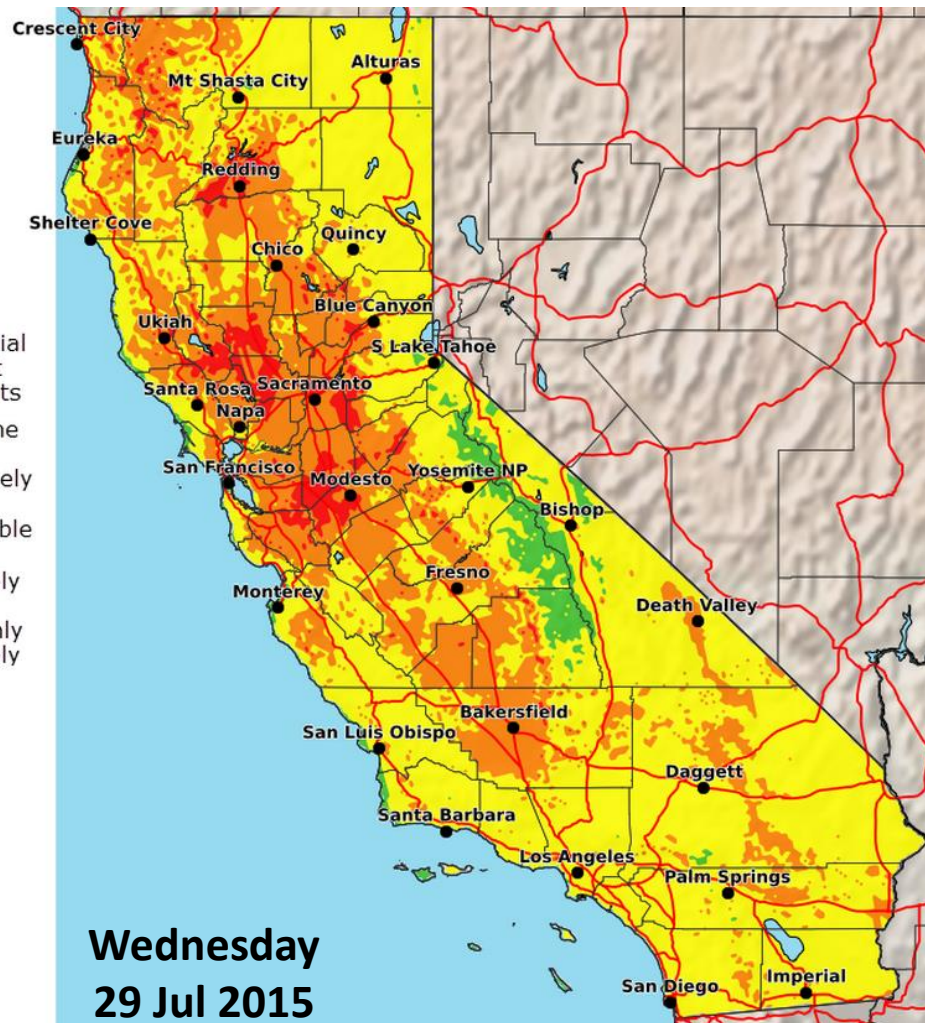

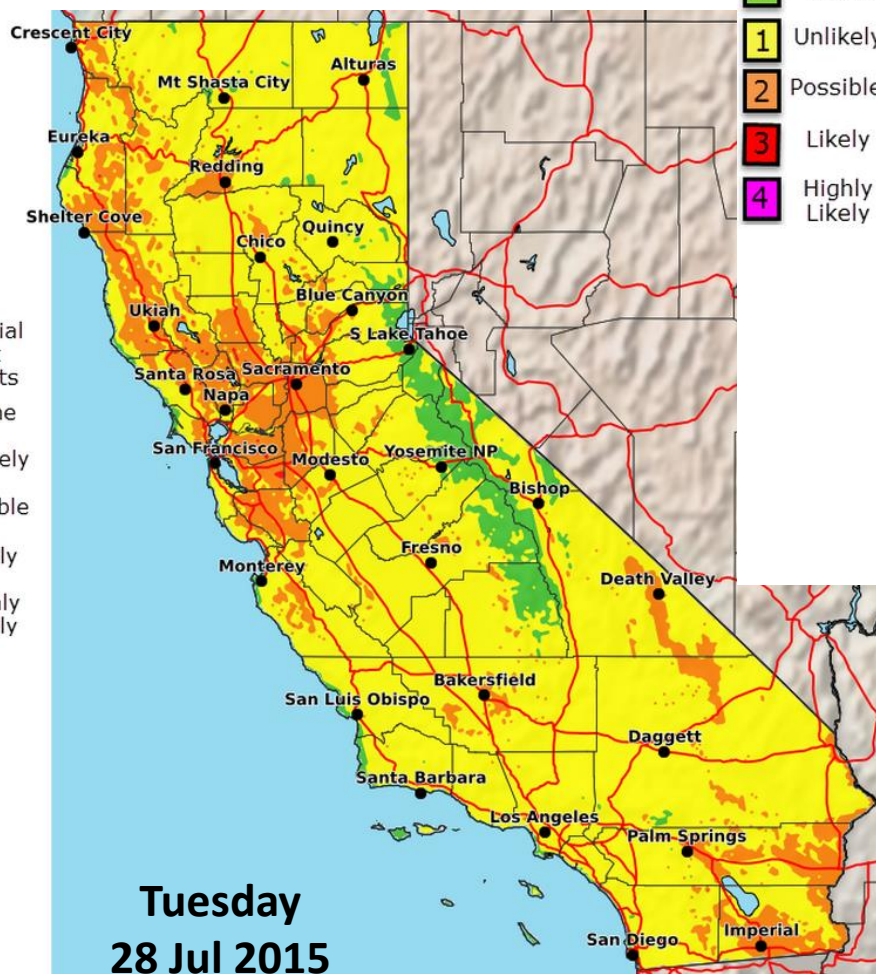

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

Executive Overview

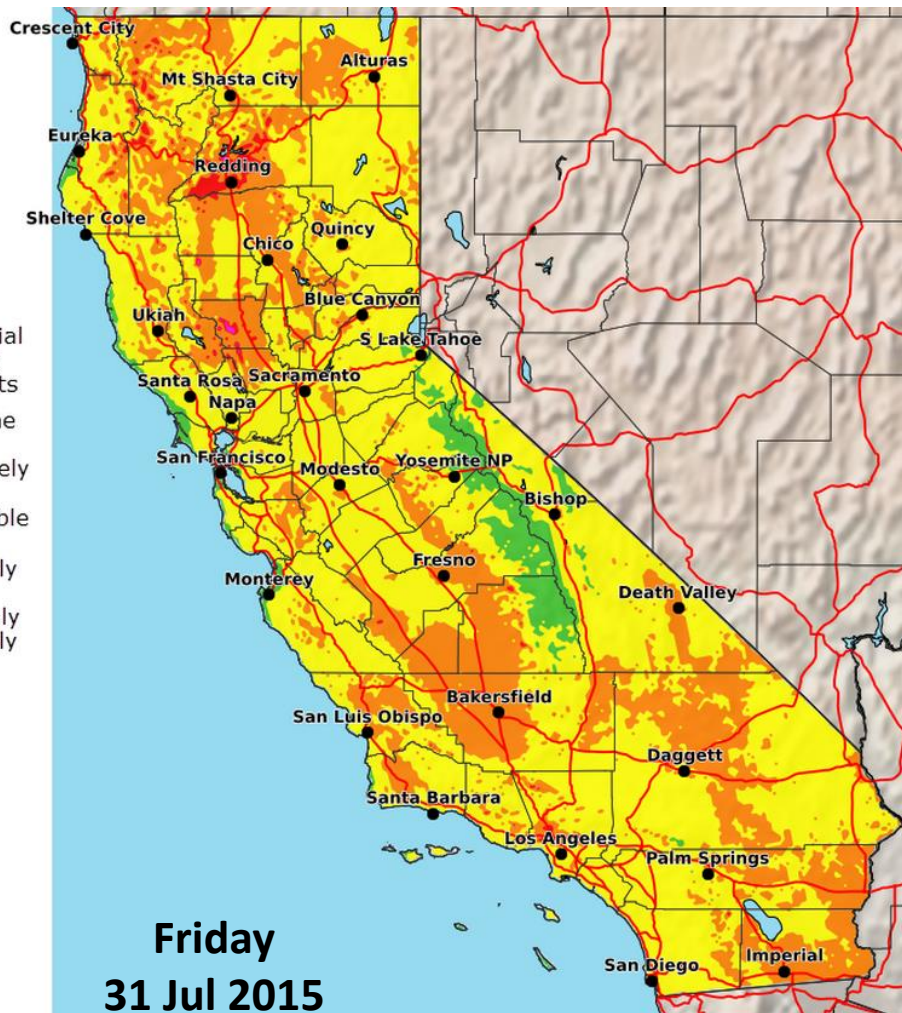

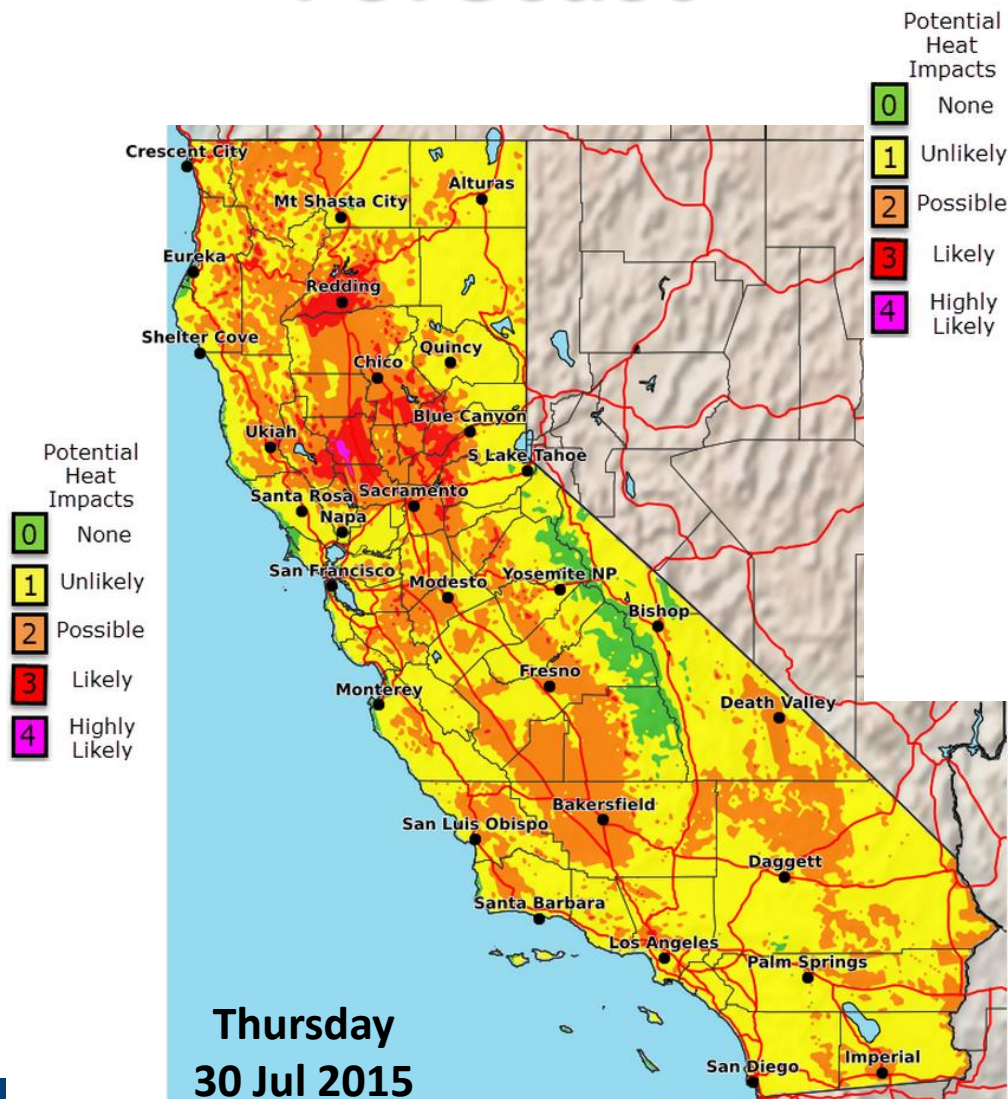

- Hot temperatures across the state starting Tuesday and continuing through Thursday. Warmest days will be Wednesday and Thursday.
- Slightly cooler temperatures Friday and through the weekend
- Greatest heat impacts over the Sacramento River Valley Wednesday and Thursday
- Increasing threat of thunderstorms and localized heavy rain and flash flooding starting Wednesday over far southern part of state shifting north Thursday and through the weekend, mainly over the Sierra.
- Elevated fire weather threat due to increased thunderstorm activity

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Another hot and dry day is in store for northwest California. Some relief will arrive on Thursday as clouds begin to stream in from the south, though muggy conditions will likely develop.

Medford Weather:

A strong upper ridge will remain over the forecast area through next weekend. Temperatures will reach triple digits in the Westside Valleys today into next weekend. Conditions will remain dry through Thursday, and then monsoonal moisture will reach the region Friday bringing the chance for thunderstorms.

Reno Weather:

High pressure over the Desert Southwest will bring above normal temperatures for the upcoming week. Increasing moisture and instability will bring a chance for thunderstorms Friday through Monday, mainly near the Sierra and in far western Nevada. Gusty outflow winds and lightning fire starts are the main concerns for Friday, with locally heavy rain possible this weekend.

San Francisco Weather:

Hot temperatures are expected to continue through the inland areas through Thursday, with warm temperatures at the coast as strong high pressure builds over the area. Temperatures will cool slightly late in the week, but increasing monsoon moisture approaching from the south will allow the possibility of showers and isolated thunderstorms by the end of the week.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Hot and dry weather is expected today and Thursday, with a slight cooling Friday into next week. Scattered mountain thunderstorms Friday and over the weekend as monsoon moisture is pulled northward, otherwise dry conditions will continue.

Hanford Weather:

Clear skies and increasing temperatures for the next couple of days as high pressure prevails over the area. Increasing clouds, shower and thunderstorm activity expected by late Thursday as tropical moisture moves in from the south.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Upper level high pressure over Texas will drift westward into New Mexico today, and then move little through Friday. Monsoonal moisture will begin to move into the region today, increase tonight and Thursday, and then linger Friday. This will bring a chance of showers and thunderstorms to the region, possibly even to coastal and valley areas, especially late tonight through early Friday. Monsoonal moisture will decrease Friday through the weekend as upper flow turns southwesterly. Dry weather is expected early next week.

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

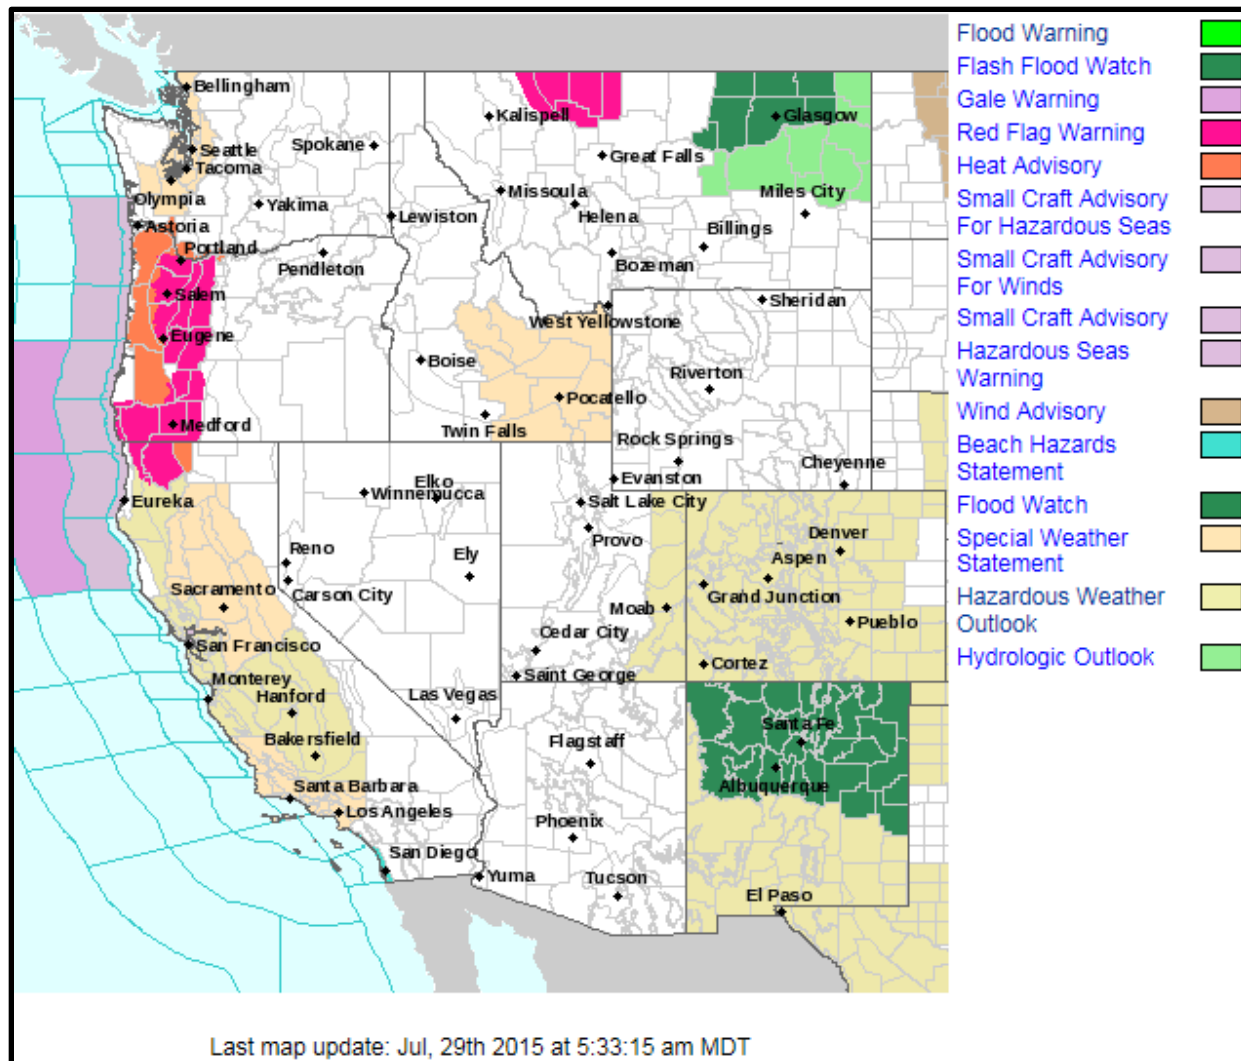

Warm and humid weather for the remainder of the week as monsoonal flow returns. High clouds will increase while the marine layer shrinks back toward the coast and there will be a chance of showers and thunderstorms just about anywhere in the region from today through Friday, although the best chances will be over the mountains and deserts in the afternoons and evenings. A shallow marine layer will continue patchy night and morning low clouds and fog along the coast.

Southeast California Weather:

The combination of ample moisture and a weather disturbance moving northward across the region is expected to trigger widespread shower and thunderstorm activity today and tonight, with strong winds, areas of blowing dust, heavy downpours, and local flash flooding possible from the heavier storms. High pressure building over the region will then gradually reduce rain chances from Thursday onward into the upcoming weekend and into early next week. Temperatures will take a slight dip below normal for today and Thursday due to widespread cloud coverage before slowly warming back up from Friday into early next week as the atmosphere slowly dries out.
